The Navy's chief critic of the survey, retired Rear Admiral William McRaven, told the Washington Times that China posed "a significant threat" in global maritime operations.. "It's pretty clear to me from all reporting over the last week and more than anything else that if anything, it's pretty clear these Chinese vessels are going to try to take a risk by not going through these [US] patrols," said the official, adding that the Navy's "strategic stability mission with the US has been very tight, which keeps a very strict emphasis on keeping China's actions from our control."
